

ABSTRACT

Radiology healthcare providers are trained or evaluated by solving practical patient problems using computer, 3D virtual imaging or manikins associated with software obtained from radiological equipment found in treatment facilities. The software is created from equipment functions and parameters. The trainee dynamically controls the environment and equipment to get results that are compared to expert solutions programmed into the computer.